Speaking of the bill Mr. RonERTS said: "The silver dollar has never been a popular coin, there never was any demand for it and it is desirted to pass permanently out of existence as a part of the United States money," therefore he was anxious for Congress to act on the bill.

Congress to act on the bill.

There is, however, an increasing demand for subsidiary coins—half, quarter dollars and dimes—and this increase is now so fast that the Mints cannot keep pace with it. The Government is now coining the smallest mount of silver dollars allowed by law—$1,000,000 per month. The full-tion for this coinage is taken from the vast store purchased by the Treasury before the repeal of the Sherman Act in 1893, and 61,000,000 ounces, or enough to coin $85,000,000, remains on hand at present.
